WASHINGTON – A right-wing activist who brought attention to debunked conspiracy theories – and who gained new prominence when he was retweeted by President Donald Trump this week – is a U.S. naval intelligence officer detailed to a reserve unit, Navy service records show.

John Michael Posobiec III's security clearance is currently suspended, according to a U.S. official, who did not disclose the reason for the suspension. Posobiec told NBC News that he was never given an explanation but suspects it was because he had become "more outspoken on Twitter."

Posobiec, who goes by Jack, is a lieutenant junior grade in the U.S. Navy Reserves, assigned to Joint Reserve Intelligence Support Element Dekalb. From March 2014 through March 2017 he was assigned to a Reserve Intelligence Unit at Office of Naval Intelligence's Naval Maritime Intelligence Center in Washington.

He resigned his civilian job with the Office of Naval Intelligence in March, claiming his support for Trump led to a "toxic work environment" and because his "political advocacy" was taking off. He went to work for Canada-based right-wing Rebel Media but has since left.

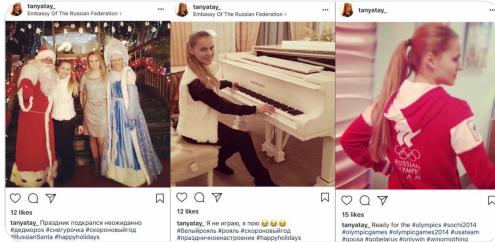

He said he "never conducted any of my political activities while in uniform or on government time. I never once mishandled classified information."

...it had something to do with his wife, a Belorussian MyPillow advocate, Tanya Gorbach.

At some point Jack's Twitter bio described him as being "fmr CBS News". CBS News has told that Posobiec never worked for them. During this time in 2016, he also live-streamed the...

A few weeks after this, a man walked into the restaurant, opening fire with a semi-automatic rifle. Posobiec later said that he was actually "debunking" the Pizzagate conspiracy theory, declaring it "stupid".

In Washington Pizzeria Attack, Fake News Brought Real Guns

Edgar M. Welch, 28, of Salisbury, N.C., surrendered to the police on Sunday in Washington. Sathi Soma, via Associated Press

By Cecilia Kang and Adam Goldman
Dec. 5, 2016

WASHINGTON — Edgar M. Welch, a 28-year-old father of two from Salisbury, N.C., recently read online that Comet Ping Pong, a pizza restaurant in northwest Washington, was harboring young children as sex slaves as part of a child-abuse ring led by Hillary Clinton.

The articles making those allegations were widespread across the web, appearing on sites including Facebook and Twitter. Apparently concerned, Mr. Welch drove about six hours on Sunday from his home to Comet Ping Pong to see the situation for himself, according to court documents. Not long after arriving at the pizzeria, the police said, he fired from an assault-like AR-15 rifle. The police arrested him. They found a rifle and a handgun in the restaurant. No one was hurt.

In Nov 2016, Jack snuck into a anti-Trump protests, planting a sign saying "Rape Melania". He denied his involvement to BuzzFeed News who reported on the issue even after BuzzFeed published the text messages with Jack allegedly planning these theatrics.

According to some Donald Trump supporters, the image above is proof that the president-elect's detractors are a bunch of hypocrites who speak out against violent rhetoric only until their preferred candidate loses an election.

According to some Trump opponents, the photo and others showing the same "Rape Melania" sign — referring to Trump's wife, Melania Trump — at an anti-Trump protest in Washington on Saturday are fake.

Jeffrey Clark, who, according to HuffPost, was "not shy about being a neo-Nazi," was arrested on Friday by the FBI after allegedly calling the Tree of Life Synagogue massacre in Pittsburgh a "dry run for things to come." In 2017, Clark apparently worked as a videographer for conservative commentator and Pizzagate conspiracy theorist Jack Posobiec, though Posobiec has denied this.

Jeffrey Clark and his brother Edward Clark were reportedly hired by Posobiec when the latter served as D.C. bureau chief for the conservative outlet The Rebel Media. The HuffPost reports that Posobiec was later fired by the outlet after allegedly plagiarizing Jason Kessler, the alt-right organizer behind the deadly Unite the Right rallies in Charlottesville, Virginia that ultimately claimed the life of 32-year-old socialist Heather Heyer.

After 11 people were killed in a Pittsburgh synagogue last month, a neo-Nazi named Jeffrey R. Clark praised the accused shooter, Robert Bowers, on social media as a "hero" and said the victims "deserved exactly what happened to them and so much worse."

The FBI said it believed there was a connection between Clark and the shooting. In an affidavit, the bureau said it found a posting showing that Clark called the Pittsburgh attack "a dry run for things to come." Clark, 30, was arrested on gun charges on Tuesday, and a federal complaint explored potential connections between Clark and Bowers on the social network Gab, where white supremacists have made a home in the last two years after being banned by more mainstream sites.

But according to an NBC News analysis of Clark's social media posts, the claim that Clark had insider knowledge of the shootings is incorrect. A look at Clark's posting history shows that he was referring to a different alleged terrorist – the man accused of sending pipe bombs to Trump critics – and that Clark posted the comment about a "dry run" before the Pittsburgh shooting took place.

Clark's profile has been removed from Gab. The archives of his posts were viewed by NBC News via pushshift.io, a social media analysis tool operated by data scientist Jason Baumgartner.

As a White House national security official prepared to give damaging testimony in the House impeachment inquiry Tuesday, President Trump and some of his allies immediately began a push to attack the integrity and patriotism of the decorated Iraq War veteran.

Former congressman and Trump surrogate Sean P. Duffy said Army Lt. Col. Alexander Vindman had "an affinity for Ukraine" over the United States because it was his birthplace. Trump's personal attorney Rudolph W. Giuliani joined in with the suggestion on Twitter that Vindman was "advising two gov's," an apparent reference to dual loyalties.

Infamous Pizzagater Jack Posobiec Pushed Hoax About Pipe Bombs Being Planted at Korean War Memorial

UNHEARD OF STUFF

The Park Police ended up having to investigate the claim only to discover that it was BS.

It was an image out of a Trump supporter's fever dream: crates of pipe bombs stashed near the Korean War Veterans Memorial, amid tense protesters at the White House and the surrounding streets. The suspects behind the explosives had fled, but federal law enforcement officers were right behind them.

The pipe bomb story was the brainchild of Jack Posobiec, a right-wing personality who's regularly retweeted by Donald Trump and who works for fledgling Trump cable network One America News. And it came like a five-alarm fire. "BREAKING: 2 crates filled with pipe bombs discovered near Korean War Memorial in DC after suspects spotted in bushes," Posobiec tweeted on Tuesday afternoon. "Federal assets in pursuit."

THE FAR-RIGHT AMERICAN NATIONALIST WHO TWEETED #MACRONLEAKS

By Andrew Rossant

Jack Posobiec calls himself a journalist who "breaks the fourth wall" to get things up. He hasn't breaking the heart of the French Presidential candidate a week. PHOTOGRAPH BY MICHAEL GOODMAN

Jack Posobiec is the bureau chief and sole employee of the Washington, D.C., office of the Rebel, a Canadian media outlet that specializes in far-right video commentary. Last weekend, I met him at a Post's Coffee a few blocks from the White House. He told me, "As a journalist, I use all the tools at my disposal"—mostly YouTube, Periscope, and Twitter—"to seek the truth and disseminate the truth. That's the purpose of journalism, right? At the same time, I also do what I call 4-D journalism, meaning that I'm willing to break the fourth wall. I'm willing to walk into an anti-Trump march and start chanting anti-Clinton stuff—to make something happen, and then cover what happens. So, activism tactics mixed with traditional journalism tactics."

When he was a student at Temple University, he said, he double-majored in political science and broadcast journalism. He joined the Navy, and was stationed in Asia for five years, when he returned to the United States, he worked as a Trump campaign volunteer before joining the Rebel. "Last week, I called my mom and went, 'Hey, Ma, look who's actually using his college degree.'" Now, in the final hours of the French Presidential contest between Emmanuel Macron, a centrist who supports the European Union, and Marine Le Pen, a far-right, anti-immigrant nationalist, Posobiec's "4-D journalism" might have a serious impact.

...can't believe people like to I can't ask him directly about his thoughts on Ali Alexander's scandal.

Posobiec helped make the "groomer" slur go viral in smearing LGBTQ+ people in the run-up to Pride '22.

He's associated himself with Ali publicly for years.
