In today's #vatniksoup, I'll introduce a Dutch, far-right political party Forum voor Democratie (FvD for short; @fvdemocratie). They're best-known for their anti-Ukraine and pro-Kremlin politics, and for their tendency to support the craziest conspiracy theories out there.

1/19

FvD was initially founded as a think tank by Thierry Baudet and Henk Otten in 2015. Their main goal was to oppose the Association Agreement between the European Union and Ukraine and the Dutch membership in the EU, calling for a referendum act on the issue.

Dutch referendum voters overwhelmingly reject closer EU links to Ukraine

Two-thirds of voters oppose political, trade and defence treaty, showing strength of Eurosceptic feeling in the Netherlands

Dutch voters have overwhelmingly rejected a Ukraine-European Union treaty on closer political and economic ties, in a rebuke to their government and to the EU establishment.

The broad political, trade and defence treaty - which had already been signed by the Dutch prime minister Mark Rutte's government and approved by all other EU nations, and Ukraine - provisionally took effect in January.

But on Wednesday 64% of Dutch referendum voters rejected it; the turnout was just 32% - barely enough for the result to be valid.

GeenPeil is one of a raft of new parties competing in the Netherlands' parliamentary election on March 15th. Many Dutch call it the strangest race they have ever seen. Other newcomers include the Forum for Democracy (FvD), headed by Thierry Baudet, a swaggering Eurosceptic intellectual; For the Netherlands (VNL), a tax-cutting, anti-immigration party headed by a sassy news-comedian; Denk ("Think"), a party that appeals mostly to immigrants from Turkey and Morocco and their offspring; and the Dutch Pirate Party. Because the Netherlands has no minimum threshold for entering parliament, any of these parties could win seats.

Otten was kicked out of FvD after he allegedly led the party apparatus in a dictatorial way and transferred some money from party donors to his own consultancy company, without permission. Baudet has been introduced on #vatniksoup previously:

In Sep 2016, FvD was converted into a political party and announced its intention to take part in the 2017 general election, in which they won two seats in the House of Representatives. After that, the party grew fast, and in 2019 they had nearly 31 000 members.

Anti-immigration populists surge in fragmented Dutch elections

FvD party on course to win 12 seats in upper house of parliament that will contain a record 12 parties

An anti-immigration populist party has won the most votes in elections for the upper house of parliament in the Netherlands, days after a shooting in Utrecht, robbing the governing coalition of its majority and forcing it to seek new alliances on the left.

In a further fragmentation of Dutch politics, the Forum for Democracy (FvD) party of Thierry Baudet, a flamboyant former academic and columnist, is on course to win 12 seats in an upper house containing a record 12 parties, none with more than 12 seats.

FvD suffered from internal issues due to their rapid growth, and in 2018 many prominent members left the party because they felt it lacked democracy in its decision-making. In 2020, the party was again a target of controversy, when its youth wing made racist...

FVD denounces the invitation of President Zelensky to address the Dutch House of Representatives and will be absent during his speech and from the ensuing parliamentary debate

On Thursday 31 March, Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky will give a virtual address to the Dutch House of Representatives. The parliamentary group of Forum for Democracy in the House of Representatives will not attend this speech, nor will it participate in the debate that follows.

From the beginning, FvD along with its leader has called for better relations between the Netherlands & Russia. Baudet strongly opposed the sanctions against Russia after the occupation of Crimea & co-signed a letter calling for new investigation on the shoot down of MH17.

KEY POINTS

- A Dutch court convicted two Russians and a pro-Moscow Ukrainian separatist in absence of the murders of 298 people who died in a 2014 downing of a flight over Ukraine.
- The three were sentenced them to life imprisonment, and one Russian was acquitted because of a lack of evidence.
- Against the geopolitical upheaval caused by Russia's full-blown invasion of Ukraine, the court also held that Moscow had overall control of the separatist Donetsk People's Republic in eastern Ukraine, from where it said the attack was launched.

In one of the messages, Baudet told Otten that he wanted to stop working as a commentator on the the TV network Powned, and suggested that "Maybe Kornilov wants to pay some extra". After the messages were published, Thierry switched immediately to damage control mode...

During the referendum campaign, Baudet sent messages to Henk Otten — former treasurer of the FvD, who was expelled from the party last year — saying that he wanted to stop working as a commentator on the TV network Powned. “Maybe Kornilov wants to pay some extra,” said one of the messages. Another thanked Otten for his support, saying “Kornilov cannot compete with that with all his money.” Both messages were accompanied with winking and smiling emojis.

...declaring that the conversations about Kornilov were a "running gag" and "playful exaggeration". The messages also revealed that he wanted Netherlands to leave NATO, despite the party's election program declaring that Dutch collaboration with NATO should be increased.

In a statement published before the TV program aired on Thursday evening, Baudet denied the allegations and said the statements about Kornilov were part of a “running gag” and were “playful exaggeration.”

“Undoubtedly, from a period of several years and several very intensive campaigns, a large number of statements can be found, made in internal WhatsApp groups or in other contexts, which are difficult to place, seem serious or, on the contrary, are difficult to take seriously. Sometimes we blew off steam in a message. Sometimes we got carried away,” he said.

In addition, Baudet has promoted conspiracy theories about "evil reptilians" and the "globalists" ruling over the world, the EU being a "a cultural Marxist project destroying European civilization," and that George Soros introduced the COVID-19 virus.

FvD, like so many other pro-Kremlin parties around Europe, has been described as ideologically national conservative, eurosceptic & right-wing populist. With the likes of Le Pen & Wilders, the rise in their popularity was already evident in the 2014 EU Parliament election.

Today, FvD is an unremarkable party and its leader Baudet is mostly being ridiculed, but a similar blueprint, with emphasis on anti-immigration, anti-EU/anti-NATO policies and populism, will be used to gain popularity in the future, too.

Similar policies brought success to Geert Wilders' PVV in the 2023 Dutch general election, when it became the largest party in the Parliament. Some political commentators have said that Wilders gained votes from former fans of newer parties like FvD:

Pekka, this is not correct. I won various court cases from Thierry Baudet about this libel and slander by Baudet about me. The court rulings can be found on my website henkotten.nl under NEWS. Baudet made up this story as I was resisting the growing Russian influence within FVD and especially the influence of John Laughland who I wanted it OUT of the party. Please rectify or delete these statements as they are not correct.
