In today's #vatniksoup, I'll introduce a Dutch right-wing activist, conspiracy theorist & social media personality, Eva Vlaardingerbroek (@evavlaar). She's best-known for her promotion of the "decline of the Decadent West" trope, and for promotion of pro-Kremlin narratives.

1/19

Eva's main audience is conservative traditionalists, and basically everything she does revolves around this theme. She also promotes various conspiracy theories about the "global elites", COVID-19 and vaccines, World Economic Forum and digitalisation of society.

The capacity for the farmers' grievances to transition into conspiratorial anti-government narratives would explain why the Dutch National Coordinator for Security and Counterterrorism (NCTV) included a statement on the farmers' movement in its report on "terrorist threats" in the Netherlands. Their assessment was that while the protests themselves were generally peaceful, harmful actors were capitalising on them to contribute to existing social polarisation. In particular, the NCTV warned that the grievances of the farmers had been co-opted by conspiracy theorists and political extremists, just as they had co-opted demonstrations against government restrictions around COVID-19. For example, the Farmers' Movement received the open support of the Dutch far-right political party Forum voor Democratie (Forum for Democracy, FvD), which was invited to speak at one of the demonstrations in 2020. Former FvD party member Eva Vlaardingerbroek even appeared in American television at the Tucker Carlson Today show to talk about the protests. In fact, she denied that a nitrogen crisis exists at all, which she said was an excuse for the Dutch government to follow their Great Reset plans over the Netherlands, a 'Pilot Country': "The Dutch farmers have had enough and are courageously fighting back against the Great Reset. They deserve your full support. They certainly have mine. It's very simple: No farmers, no food."

She's also a raging populist, and is not afraid to take current events and rally around them to get more attention to her conspiratorial ramblings. Recently, she's been involved with the protests by European farmers against increasing costs and tiny margins.

Eva Vlaardingerbroek is the most delicious clown in the farmers circus

Go for a guy

She is, in a tractor, on her way to The Hague. You really don't have to be the hardest farmer on the land to be able or to find anything from that farm slaughter - we do that ourselves, and we also think of it how an entire profession is sent through administrative chaos and European overjoining with all-destructive results of the clod of the stuff. But this Eva Vlaardingerbroek is really the most ridiculous product of the protests, with her stiletto heels and her belech scarf. This Amsterdam born comedian last saw a farm in 1998, and she was very good at Farming Simulator 22. Suddenly she is a self-proclaimed farmer margar, an AI-manufactured poster girl of the tucker carlsonization of the farmers' protests, as a melod of Minerva safely in the nest of farmer Rutger's tractor. - And why? Only for your own gain, of course. For the boar, so that she can later say that she was such an influential peer, and because actually all the policy is just shit. It's a walking barrel of acid. Forum, yellow vests, antivaxxes, farmers, conspiracy-bathing, you can go on for hours, with the absolute highlight that childlike groonling with that sunburn; it is really too moron for words. Truly the only plus of Eva Vlaardingerbroek is that she is a less idiotic variant of Raisa Blommestijn, because it is simply outright evil.

Hundreds of tractors choked Brussels city centre on Thursday and angry farmers pelted the European parliament with eggs. Although agriculture was not on the agenda for EU leaders meeting just up the road, politicians may find that they ignore these grievances at their peril.

Here is a look at what lies behind the farmers' protests that have been sweeping Europe for months - in countries such as Greece, Germany, Portugal, Poland and France, where the government was taken by surprise this week by a motorway blockade of Paris.

Some concerns, such as a plan by Berlin to phase out tax breaks on agricultural diesel to balance the budget, or a requirement in the Netherlands to reduce nitrogen emissions - are country-specific. But many are shared continent-wide.

In 2016, she joined the far-right political party, Forum voor Democratie (FvD). Some years later she became an intern at the FvD faction in the European Parliament, and soon left her position at the university in order to fully focus on her political career with the FvD.

HER INTERNSHIP IN BRUSSELS IS JUST OVER

The interview is in Café Dudok in Hilversum. Her parents live in the broadcasting city and she grew up there. Her French boyfriend Julien Rochedy is there. In the morning they were in Amsterdam to look for housing. Afterwards, they move on. For the past six months, the couple – Rochedy is a writer – lived together in Brussels, where she did an internship at Rob Roos, a europarlementarian on behalf of Forum for Democracy. That internship just over. In the coming years, Vlaardingerbroek will work as a lecturer-researcher at Leiden University.

FvD leader Thierry Baudet soon announced that Eva would fill the 5th spot on FvD's candidate list for the House of Representatives. Few months later FvD faced a huge crisis when its youth wing had made some extreme remarks, including praise of Anders Breivik &

In addition to Joost Eerdmans, the independent member of parliament Wybren van Haga and the Tilburg local politician Hans Smolders are also high on the list of the candidate list of Forum for Democracy for the elections in March. The first ten candidates have two women: First Chamber member Nicki Pouw-Verweij on three and right-field philosopher Eva Vlaardingerbroek in fifth place. She gained publicity on television and social media because of her right-wing views and her support for FvD.

Like most conspiracy theorists, Eva often creates doomsday scenarios around topics she has no clue about, like for example cybersecurity and the threat of "cyber pandemics", which according to her would lead to martial law and the adoption of Europe-wide mass surveillance.

 Eva Vlaardingerbroek
@EvaVlaar Subscribe ...

🚫 Did you know that 2 years ago the WEF posted a video 'warning' us about the possibility of a CYBER PANDEMIC?

It is an absolute must watch if you want to get insight into their strategies and how this "cyber pandemic" could potentially be the great catalyzer for The Great Reset...

As you can see in the video, they're talking about a "cyber-attack with COVID-like characteristics" that will deregulate our entire infrastructure - way more than covid has ever done.

Even more interesting, is that they state that this virus could only be stopped by globally shutting down the internet. Yes, you read that right.

Imagine what will happen if we're cut off from the internet. Everything imaginable will stop working: Traffic, transportation, the healthcare systems, food and water supplies, the list goes on and on and on.

Absolute chaos and mayhem will arise. The financial system will most likely crash, people will start looting and within 24 hours (or when food starts running out), people will start bashing each other's skulls in.

The solution they'll propose?

First, I imagine it to be some form of martial law to shut down the riots. Once order is restored out of chaos they'll then introduce measures to "prevent a disaster like that from ever happen again".

At this point, the majority of the population will probably gladly accept any restriction/measure out of pure desperation and fear. In fact, they'll probably be begging for it.

What could those be? Think Central Bank Digital Currencies, Digital ID, ID verification to regain access to the internet, facial recognition, it will all be made mandatory - for our "safety", of course.

Of course, all of these things can and most likely will be implemented even without the need for a cyber pandemic, if enough people comply. What do you think will happen?

Will they go for something drastic like this? Or do you think they'll hit us with another round of covid or a news virus of some sorts?

Eva doesn't speak a lot about Ukraine, but when she does, she condemns it as a pointless money sink. She's also claimed that the whole thing is just another scheme to make weapon manufacturers and companies like BlackRock even wealthier.

After the Carlson interview with Putin, she praised the dictator's 30 minute revisionist history rant, stating that it has "current political relevance", and that no other leader could give such a detailed (biased and made-up) "historical account" as Putin did.

Eva Vlaardingerbroek

@EvaVlaar

Subscribe

Putin's 30 minute account of Russia's history was incredibly interesting, not just because of its current political relevance, but especially because it directly highlights the fact that not a single Western leader today could give such a detailed historical account of their own nation the way Putin did.

We in the West no longer have any idea who we are. We have no idea of our own history. Why would we? It's been actively suppressed and rejected. In fact, the only thing our current political "leadership" prides itself on, is the rejection of our "backwards history". When asked what The West is about, most people will repeat some type of cliché narrative that we've evolved past our nationalistic barbarism into enlightened "liberal democratic societies".

It's ironic because as the Putin interview confirmed once again on multiple accounts, "liberal democracy" in the West is an illusion. With the current President of the United States being undeniably senile, it couldn't possibly be more in our face. Our government leaders –let alone our parliamentary representatives – aren't actually the ones pulling the strings, but that obvious fact isn't causing the outrage you'd expect. Most people simply play along, even though they know the emperor has no clothes on. For some it might be because they don't know where to start or there's a level of cognitive dissonance and they aren't willing to face the truth, but there are many who are so brainwashed that they actually don't realize they're pawns in a globalist play.

In the latter case the brainwashing has been so successful that anybody who tries to tell them they're being lied to is automatically labelled a conspiracy theorist. It's almost like an immune response: The threat is immediately and automatically located and neutralized. These pawns are the most useful. As Goethe said: The best slave is one who thinks he's free.

To get back to the Russia-Ukraine war: You can dislike Putin all you want, but there is no denying that he is in it for his own people. He's in it for Russia and he has a clear idea of what Russia is and what it stands for. And the real question is, who are the ones really perpetuating this war if the CIA was behind the Ukrainian regime change in 2014 and a peace deal was reached in 2022, but rejected at the last minute because of Boris Johnson's interference? Is Russia really the expansionist aggressor its been made out to be, or has the bear just been poked too often?

One thing is for sure: this was a historical interview, which will be talked about for many many years to come and will hopefully contribute to the de-escalation of this conflict. Thank you, @TuckerCarlson.
