In today's #vatniksoup, I'll introduce a Malaysian conspiracy theorist, journalist and social media addict, Ian Miles Cheong (@stillgray). He's best-known for his online attention-seeking activities, for his anti-Ukraine stance, and for simping @elonmusk and other techbros.

1/24

Ian's online history goes way back. During the early 2010s, he was a moderator on Reddit, moderating some of its biggest subreddits. He was eventually banned for paid promotions he hadn't disclosed to the site. He was also working as a games journalist, working for sites...

2/24

Reddit moderator banned for selling his influence

As Sollivictus, Ian Miles Cheong moderated some of Reddit's most popular sections. He was also a "social media consultant" for hire.

Kevin Morris | Internet Culture | Posted on Apr 3, 2012 | Updated on Jun 2, 2021, 7:06 pm CDT

Ian Miles Cheong had a spamming problem.

The journalist and editor of gaming site Gameranx had for years promoted his content on social news site Reddit, where, under the pseudonym Sollivictus, he served as a volunteer moderator at some of the site's most trafficked forums.

At some point, redditors learned about Cheong's surreptitious link-hawking and tipped off the site's staff in January. Reddit, which sees 35 million unique visitors a month and is the self-proclaimed "front page of the Internet," banned him about a month later.

...like Gameranx, The Guardian and Ars Technica. When some of his older chat logs were leaked, they showed his edgelord-y behavior where he praised one Adolf Hitler. He apologized but blamed everything on the "toxic gaming community."

He also SWATted a fellow YouTuber.

3/24

But Pires' channel didn't receive a strike for the porno thumbnails, so Pires continued to post the rest of his video series about Cheong's suspected skullduggery. That's when Cheong called Canadian law enforcement against Pires, alleging criminal activity by his former business partner. Audio of Cheong telling someone about his call to Canadian police leaked.

Cheong admitted to Right Wing Watch that he called a Canadian law enforcement tip-line after Pires posted videos to YouTube about him, telling authorities that his former colleague possessed illegal firearms and narcotics, and said he cautioned police that Pires was subject to intense paranoia. He says these were things Pires had told him privately. Detectives arrived at Pires' home where they spoke with him, found no illegal weapons or drugs, and left.

"My mindset at the time was not very good. He was going after my personal life. I could not get him to stop. YouTube would not respond," Cheong said. "It's something I regret, for sure." In the United States, concocted complaints of that nature often lead to a SWAT team descending on the target's home, but Cheong seemed to suggest that what he did was less threatening to Pires than it would have been had he lived in the U.S. "I knew I wouldn't get him killed," Cheong told Right Wing Watch. "There was no malice there, but I just wanted to get him to stop."

In the U.S., calls similar to the one Cheong placed to Canadian authorities have resulted in what is known as "swatting"; the dangerous action of having a SWAT police team sent to someone's home under false pretenses by calling the police to falsely report that a hostage situation or a bomb threat is taking place at the intended victim's home address. In the past, such pranks have resulted in the targets being killed by police.

...to someone who doesn't. He also started supporting Trump and his rather strong right-wing views.

On thing you should know, is that Mr. Cheong spends most of his time online & especially on Twitter. All this time spent online has made him an expert on military strategy...

5/24

...,US foreign policy, geopolitics, and basically every other topic out there.

He also has a knack of figuring out the REAL truth on every topic, and based on Ian "telling the truth matters." Because Cheong cares about the truth, we can trust everything he's tweeted.

Is Twitter a right-wing social network, an echo chamber? Far from it, under @elonmusk's stewardship, Twitter has become a true marketplace of ideas.

Might be a good idea to take Starlink offline for the terminals used on the frontlines. Could encourage them to reconsider their position on advancing towards Crimea and leading the world further into the brink of total war.

Elon Musk, Here's What Unplugging Starlink Means For Ukrainians On The Front Line

Tech billionaire Elon Musk has long been considered one of Ukraine's key supporters, but he has just announced restrictions on the Ukrainian military's use of his Starlink satellites. Die Welt spoke to soldiers on the front lines in Bakhmut who are already feeling the effects.

@elonmusk Ukraine desperately needs your continued support. Please restore the full functionality of your Starlink satellites. Defense from a genocidal invasion is not an offensive capability. It's survival. Innocent lives will be lost. You can help. Thank you.

You're smart enough not to swallow media & other propaganda bs.
Starlink is the communication backbone of Ukraine, especially at the front lines, where almost all other Internet connectivity has been destroyed.
But we will not enable escalation of conflict that may lead to WW3.

...further escalation in the war. And this is exactly what Elon did in Feb 2023, in order to "avoid escalation."

Now that Musk seems to be endorsing DeSantis by offering him a platform on Twitter, Ian has suddenly forgotten about Trump and started endorsing Ronnie.

Ian seemed to be excited about the Twitter Spaces chat that was held, even claiming that it was unscripted.

To conclude, to me it seems that Ian Miles Cheong is an attention whore with broken morale compass. Also, he lies a LOT.

Is anyone else excited for the Twitter Spaces chat later with @elonmusk, @DavidSacks and @rondesantis?

And more on that: Kiev too made a choice. It could've chosen to be neutral to NATO and acknowledged Russia's security concerns and ceded DNP/LNP and Crimea. It chose to keep pursuing membership in NATO and engaging in continued hostilities with the separatists. Was it worth it?

There are consequences for every action. Voting for Biden got a weak president in office. That weak president could've held Russia at bay with a promise of military action (i.e. Trump), but instead threatened only economic sanctions. Russia decided that the cost was worth it.

Thanks for all the coffee, it seems that people REALLY dislike Ian.

CORRECTION TO TWEET 3/24:

I couldn't find any articles written by Ian for Ars Technica, and a person who has worked for the site for 20 years didn't have any recollection of this, either. So, apparently Cheong never wrote for them.
