In today's #vatniksoup, I'll introduce a Swiss social media personality, investment banker and journalist, Vadim Loskutov (@runews). He's best-known for praising Russia and its politics, and criticizing the West while living comfortably in Switzerland.

1/16

This research was conducted in collaboration with the Swiss NAFO fellas and The Unintelligence Agency.

Loskutov allegedly originally hails from the Republic of Kalmykia, located in the North Caucasus region of Southern Russia.

According to some Wikibin entries, Vadim was allegedly building a career as a media personality in Russia. Based on the text, he worked as a presenter and video jockey on various Russian music shows during the 90s, and he allegedly also voiced radio advertisements.

Vadim Loskutov (), born on January 31, 1980 in Russia, is a business news anchor, reporter and interviewer. This led from a job as a music presenter on Russian national TV channel in 1993, where he presented the show Muzophone which featured alternative music videos and live studio performances in collaboration with the European music channels: MTV UK, VIVA Germany and MCMFrance. His success led to additional music video shows on the first Russian TV channel. When MTV Russia launched in 1998 he became a Video Jockey. Arguably his most popular live-program was "Muzophone", where he acted as a producer and a host. Between 1993 and 1997, he hosted the cult music live radio series FM-Stereo, a daily show which soon became the most popular one in Radio of Russia. After it ended in 1997 he got a weekly 90 minute show European Top 20 which was not that successful. He left Radio Rossii in 1996. His subsequent work includes presenting Propaganda show from 1999, broadcast on the Swiss radio station LoRa FM 97.5. He also worked as compère for the first DDT Concert, a live concert recorded in Volkshaus (Zurich), Switzerland, in May 2006 due to the 15-year jubilee tour of the Russian rock band DDT. and also contributed to the as well as voiced several radio advertisements.

The whole biography seems extremely sketchy, as he would've been just 13-years old when he was working as a music presenter on Russian national TV, and 18-years old when was a video jockey, producer and a host on Russian MTV.

There is hardly any proof of this, and the whole career history could be completely made up to hide his intelligence background or to help him getting employed in Switzerland. Whatever the truth is, we couldn't locate any evidence that a man named Vadim Loskutov ever...

...worked in the Russian music business. But we do know that Vadim had a show called RussenRadio! in Swiss alternative radio channel called LoRa. The show featured Russian music, news and comedy sketches for German and English speaking audiences.

Alumni Award 2018

In 2018, the "EMBA UZH Alumni Award" went to Vadim Loskoutov Schmid and Fatmir Bekiri for their work "The influence of social media on the financial markets".

Vadim Loskoutov Schmid and Fatmir Bekiri have taken on a highly explosive theme. In the end, it is about the impact of social media on our securities account and our pension funds. But what do Twitter, Facebook and Co have to do with our wealth trend? The findings of the work can best be explained with a concrete example.

Last year, the news was made by the round that a United Airlines passenger was brutally beaten by the airport security forces. Pictures and video of the man who bled violently out of the mouth went through all social media platforms after blinking. The negative feedback from users was devastating and resulted in a so-called shitstorm against the company. Within a very short time, the United Airlines share lost 1.4 billion dollars in value. Fortunately, the stock was not in my securities deposit, but at my pension fund I do not even know.

That the man was a troublemaker and had provoked the incident itself did not matter. Twenty years ago, without mobile phones and social media, the images and videos would probably not have been distributed at all and certainly not spread so quickly. In the past, there would have been a sound journalistic analysis of the events and individual statements, and the outcry would certainly not have been so great. But today is not earlier....

Vadim Loskoutov Schmid and Fatmir Bekiri thus show unadorned empirically how social media combined with emotions, speed and an intense group dynamic have a direct effect on our wallet, but also negatively and positively. No company can escape this new world and such incidents through looking away. It therefore needs a proactive social media strategy for every company, when Vadim Loskoutov Schmid and Fatmir Bekiri are needed.

And in my opinion, at least one awareness raising awareness of every private individual. Or did you know that, for example, a trader makes their buying or selling decisions, partly based on tweets, whether true or untrue? Thanks to the authors of the work "The influence of social media on the financial markets", at least the EMBA Alumni UZH now know it.

The Swiss favourite bank of Venezuela's state elite

► PDVSA money laundering scandal: The connections to Switzerland

Corrupt officials in Venezuela have earned hundreds of billions of dollars in their own pockets. Many of these state servants used a Swiss bank for their business.

Between 2003 and 2015, 385 billion dollars are said to have spent corruption in Venezuela. This figure is likely to have increased further after the economic decline of the South American country, and thus the plight of the citizens has accelerated since then.

Many members of the Venezuelan establishment, who are accused of corruption, maintain accounts at a bank in Switzerland. The US news agency Bloomberg has now discovered which financial institution it is mostly about: the name Compagnie Bancaire Helvétique (CBH) repeatedly appears.

Swiss authorities informed

This small Geneva Institute with a total assets of 9.3 billion Swiss Nicolas Madurofrancs is the "bank of election" for many Venezuelans when it comes to hiding money, "Bloomberg" quotes former prosecutor Zair Munday, who now tries to prove fraudulent crimes to Nicolas Maduro's regime and his ally.

Compagnie Bancaire Helvetique (CBH)

Data show that Swiss bank Compagnie Bancaire Helvetique (CBH) paid just under 229,000 euros to Eliminalia — after hiring one of its partners, ReputationUp — to take down content linking it to offshore companies and money laundering charges. CBH wanted to scrub all mention of the bank's relationship with Lazaro Baez, an Argentinian businessman who was convicted of laundering tens of millions of dollars' worth of illicitly sourced money, linked to corrupt public contracts, using the bank's accounts. OCCRP was among the outlets targeted for reporting on CBH's dubious ties. A lawyer for CBH confirmed the bank had contracted ReputationUp, but said it was unaware of its relationship to Eliminalia.

Elon Musk has a unique ability to voice what many people think but hesitate to express openly. Yesterday, he criticized Germany for their support of the illegal transportation of young men from Africa into Europe. Today, he is raising questions about Ukraine's insatiable appetite for funding from US taxpayers. It's notable that these are topics that few, if any, newspapers have dared to address before.
